This series of paintings that follow on from my Audi Five Cities Showcase, take a closer look at some of the issues facing Hamilton/Kirikiriroa. Through the expressionist style, using layers of paint, stories and questions emerge about the direction in which the city is heading. These include the death of the quarter acre section, the loss of fertile food producing land to urbanisation and the glaring gap between rich and poor.

These paintings evoke memories of the classic beach houses that are steadily disappearing from New Zealand's coast and of summers spent at the beach. The focus is on colour and form. The colours offer a reflection of those favoured when these houses were built. They are juxtaposed with a modernist simplicity that places the era of these houses within a very contemporary context.
